5. I am a specialist in charge of the follow-up visits, like those preoperative arrangements for transplants.
6. We have another specialist in charge of the postoperative follow-up visits.

Translation

Investigator: Hello?

Doctor Liu: Hello!

Investigator: Well, I'd like to ask, are there many patients waiting in line at this hospital?

Doctor Liu: What is your blood type?

Investigator: Type B.

Doctor Liu: Type B?

Investigator: Yes.

Doctor Liu: Oh, does your patient have hepatitis B cirrhosis?

Investigator: He has end-stage cirrhosis.

Doctor Liu: Well, listen, it goes this way.

Investigator: Okay.

Doctor Liu: First thing first, bring me his files. Oh well, it is Thursday morning. You should have registered for an appointment with the specialist, Director Xu, at the clinic.

Investigator: Director Xu, what is his full name?

Doctor Liu: Xu Zhidan

Investigator: Xu Zhigang?

Doctor Liu: It is Dan, as in Danqing.

Investigator: So, he's the one who does the best job in Jiangxi Provincial People's Hospital, right? Director Xu.

Doctor Liu: He's the one to go to for a liver transplant! Okay.

Investigator: Okay. That's fine. How many teams in your hospital? Or is he the only one?

Doctor Liu: We have separate teams to handle either liver or kidney transplants separately. But for liver transplants here, he is the only surgeon!

Investigator: Okay. For how many years has Director Xu performed liver transplants? How about his experience or skills?

Doctor Liu: Think about it, our hospital has been doing liver transplants since 2002.

Investigator: Ah...you're been doing it since 2002? Oh, well, how many cases did you do last year? I mean how many did Director Xu perform last year?

Doctor Liu: About 50 to 60, or over 60 cases of liver transplants should be done last year.

Investigator: Ah, over 60 cases. Oh, that's good. So, how many hospitals do it in Jiangxi Province?

Doctor Liu: Both the First Affiliated Hospital and the Second Affiliated Hospital (of Nan Chang University) also do it.

Investigator: Ah, they both do it as well. But both of those places don't do as many as your hospital, right?

Doctor Liu: Well, you can check that out for yourself. I don't know their data.

Investigator: Ah, yeah. I was wondering, but may not be right. I mean for those patients who get in the queue at whichever hospital they visit...Do you know how many patients on your waiting list at this hospital?

Doctor Liu: That is not particularly related to the waiting list.

Investigator: Really?

Doctor Liu: Why? Even if you get in the queue at as many hospitals as you can, how could any of the organ sources that you've acquired be used if none matches with you?

Investigator: Ah, ah, so they can't be used....

Doctor Liu: Even if you become the first in the queue, so what?

Investigator: Ah, you are right. It is useless if it fails to match.

Doctor Liu: For your wait time in the queue, that, that's a different matter when it comes to organ transplants.

Investigator: Oh, that depends on luck, right?

Doctor Liu: Don't you think so?

Investigator: Okay, that's fine. What is your family name?

Doctor Liu: My family name is Liu.

Investigator: Okay, it's Liu, alright, Doctor Liu.

Doctor Liu: Mine is Liu.

Investigator: Are you a doctor or nurse?

Doctor Liu: I am a specialist in charge of the follow-up visits, like those preoperative arrangements for transplants.

Investigator: Oh, so after the transplants, are you still in charge?

Doctor Liu: After the transplants, there is another specialist in charge of the follow-up visits then.

Investigator: Ah, okay. Thank you, Doctor Liu. I will get back to you later if I need help. Thanks.

Doctor Liu: Okay, okay.

Investigator: Oh, okay. Bye, bye.

Doctor: Okay, okay. Bye.
